

I would like to take this opportunity to express my concern regarding any type of copy protection schemes added to the digital television specification. Not only would this likely restrict the public's ability to record and view content at more convenient times but I am also concerned as to what kind of problems this might cause the thousands of taxpayers who currently own digital television receivers or tuners.

It is my opinion that the FCC should stay out of this argument and let the legislature and/or marketplace settle this issue.

Justin Bowser